

MISCELLANY

About Husband
BY JOHN G. SAGE
"A man is, in general, better pleased when he has a good dinner upon his table, than when his wife speaks Greek."
[Sam. Johnson.
Johnson was right. I don't agree to all. The solemn dogmas of the rough old stager;
But very much approve what one may call The minor morals of the "Ura Major."
Johnson was right. Although some men adore Wisdom in woman, and with learning cram her,
There isn't one in ten but thinks far more Of his own grub than of his spouse's grammar.
I know it is the greatest shame in life, But who among them, (save, perhaps, myself),
Returning hungry home, but asks his wife What beef—not books—she has upon the shelf?
Though Greek and Latin be the lady's boast, They're little valued by her loving mate; The kind of tongues that husbands relish most Is modern, boiled, and served upon a plate.
Or if, as fond ambition may command, Some home-made verse the happy matron show him,
What mortal spouse but from her dainty hand Would sooner see a pudding than a poem?
Young lady—deep in love with Tom or Harry— 'Tis sad to tell you such a tale as this; But here's the moral of it: Don't ye marry; Or, marrying, take your lover as he is—
A very man—with something of the brute, (Unless he prove a sentimental neddly,) With passions strong, and appetite to boot; A thirsty soul within a hungry body!
A very man—not one of nature's clouds— With human failings, whether saint or sinner; Endowed, perhaps, with genius from the gods, But apt to take his temper from his dinner.

Names and Name-Givers,
A Philadelphia contemporary has an interesting article on this subject, which is called forth by the recent baptism of the Prince of Wales' second son:
Instead of having the regulated number of sponsors, the little Prince had seven, viz: The Queen of Denmark, the King of Hanover, the Princess Louise of Hesse, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the Duke of Cambridge and the Prince of Leiningen. Of these seven, only the two last were present. The others were represented by proxy—Queen Victoria standing up for the Queen of Denmark, the infant's other grand-mother. It is not stated, in the elaborate description of this ceremonial, whether there was anything particular as to the water used in the baptism. When the Prince of Wales was christened, the King of Prussia was his god-father, and the water used was brought from the river Jordan for that specific purpose, and was not, as might have been expected from the King's prediction, a liquid supplied by the Widow Cliquot. The newly-made Christian, according to the English custom, was let lightly off with only four names—George—Frederick—Ernest—Albert. In Austria, the usual average of royal names is four; in Prussia, it is three; in Russia, it is two; in Belgium, there are eighteen names among three royal children. In Brazil, Portugal and Spain, each royal Christian's given names are so numerous that it must be quite an effort of memory to remember them. The Emperor Pedro, of Brazil, has fifteen names, his eldest daughter eight, and her sister the same number. In Spain, five royal children have forty-four names among them. Napoleon III and his wife have three names each, and the Prince Imperial has five; but others of the Bonaparte family have many more. The Orleans children averaged five each, and the Bourbons four. The Queen of Hanover has twelve; Victor Emanuel seven; his eldest son eight; and his sister-in-law twelve. The deposed Duchess of Modena also sports a round dozen. The Prince of Orange, about to marry Queen Victoria's daughter, has six names. One of the Saxe-Weimar Princes has ten, but the royal house of Portugal and Saxony carry this absurdity of bearing many names to the extreme. King Louis, of Portugal, has nineteen names, while two sisters and a brother have forty-two among them, and three more of that family rejoice in twenty-one names apiece. The King of Saxony has sixteen—but the average of his house is one lower. Some of the inferior princely houses of Europe are very strong in the name line.
Very much in contrast with the strange practice of loading children with a crowd of names, is the general practice in countries wholly or partially republican: Out of seventeen persons who have occupied the Pres-sidential chair, all except three had only one Christian name! In England, too, among the great political rulers and leaders, the same may be observed; Walpole, the two Pitts, Canning, Grey, Peel, Brougham, Gladstone, Cobden, Bright, Disraeli, and a great number of one-named persons might be counted up, and a comparatively small number of eminent men with more than one—though in this minority are Fox, Sheridan and Curran; Lords Derby and Palmerston, and Mr. Gladstone. Among the single names are the two Bacons, (Roger and Francis,) Shakespeare, Johnson, Milton, Cowley, Maxwell, Donne, Dryden, Pope, Prior, Goldsmith, Samuel Johnson, Cowper, Scott, Rogers, Moore, Edgeworth, Smollet, Fielding, Griffin and Dickens.

All this, however, is a digression from the original question, whether Victoria, "head of the Church," has not violated her own Rubric, by giving seven instead of three sponsors to her little grand-son. It is to be hoped they will make a good Christian of him at any rate.

LUXURIES OF THE ANCIENTS—DISCOVERIES AT POMPEII.—Galignani's Messenger, of August 9, has the following:
The excavations at Pompeii are going on with an activity, stimulated by the important discoveries made almost at every step, and the quantities of gold and silver found, which more than suffice to cover the cost of the works. Near the Temple of Juno, of which an account was recently given, has just been brought to light, a house no doubt belonging to some millionaire of the time, as the furniture is of ivory, bronze, and marble. The couches of the triclinium, or dining-room, are especially of extreme richness. The flooring consists of an immense mosaic, well preserved in parts, and of which the centre represents a table laid out for a grand dinner. In the middle, on a large dish, may be seen a splendid peacock, with its tail spread out, and placed back to back with another bird also of elegant plumage. Around them are arranged lobsters, one of which holds a blue egg in its claws, a second an oyster, which appears to be fricasseed, as it is open, and covered with herbs; a third, a rat forti, and a fourth, a small vase filled with fried grasshoppers. Next comes a circle of dishes of fish, interspersed with others of partridges, hares, and squirrels, which all have their heads placed between their fore feet. Then comes a row of sausages of all forms, supported by one of eggs, oysters, and olives, which, in its turn is surrounded by a double circle of peaches, cherries, melons and other fruits and vegetables. The walls of the triclinium are covered with fresco paintings of birds, fruits, flowers, game, and fish of all kinds, the whole interspersed with drawings, which lend a charm to the whole not easy to describe. On a table of rare wood, carved and inlaid with gold, marble, and agate, and lapis lazuli, were found amphorae still containing wine, and some goblets of onyx.
